

Organ Transplant Among Minorities

How we can reduce the need and improve access

Racial and ethnic minorities are at higher risk for kidney disease and kidney failure, but kidney transplant, the best treatment for kidney failure, is not as easy for minorities to access. This is, in part, because there is a shortage of organ donors with minority backgrounds. Dr. Clive O. Callender, founder of National Minority Donor Awareness Week and the Minority Organ Tissue Transplant Education Program (MOTTEP), will talk to you about:

- Health disparities (differences between communities) in the area of transplant, and our progress in eliminating them
 - The steps we need to take to eliminate health disparities
- The ways education among minority and majority communities can help to eliminate disparities.
